Two football coaches are among the people who are fighting to keep the school open. The coaches, Mike Smith and John Rooney, have been trying to save the school for years.

Smith, who played football for the school in the 1980s, said he was concerned about the school's future.

"This is a community school," Smith said. "We've been here for generations."

Rooney, who is the head football coach, said he was worried about the impact of closing the school on the community.

"This is more than just a football program," Rooney said. "This is a part of the fabric of this community."

The school board is expected to make a decision on the future of the school in the coming weeks. Parents, students, and community members are expected to gather to show their support for the school.

"We're going to fight," Smith said. "We're not going to give up without a fight."

Despite the challenges, Smith and Rooney are optimistic about the school's future.

"We've been through a lot," Rooney said. "But we've always come out on top."